

Felix Kumah Abiwu

---

Felix Kumah-Abiwu is an Assistant Professor of Pan-African Studies at Kent State University. He received his Ph.D. in Political Science (International Relations, Comparative Politics/Public Policy) from West Virginia University (USA). He also studied at Ohio University (USA) and the Legon Center for International Affairs and Diplomacy (LECIAD), University of Ghana. His research focuses on African security issues, politics of development, elections/electoral violence, democratization in Africa, foreign policy and narcotics policy issues. He is the author of The Dynamics of U.S. Narcotics Policy Change: Implications for the Global Narcotics Regime (2012). He has contributed a chapter on the security challenges of drug trafficking in West Africa to a volume published by the UN University for Peace (UPEACE). Dr. Kumah-Abiwu's scholarly articles have appeared in the Commonwealth Journal of International Affairs (The Round Table), Commonwealth & Comparative Politics, Journal of Pan African Studies, West Africa Review, International Journal of Public Administration, Social Sciences, and Journal of Economics/Sustainable Development.

fkumahabiwu@gmail.com

fkumahab@kent.edu