	"Guto is the large and permanent settlement of the K'allu of the Gona moiety" of the Borana. In mid-1963 there was an important election of adula councilors. At that time the Kallu of those days was not yet of age.

"The young ritual leader was constrained by many taboos. He was not allowed to travel alone or to carry arms. -- Until he came of age, his oldest half-brother, Boru Tutto, would continue to act in his stead."

Before the election there was so much tension that the governor in Arero was asked to send policemen to help the Kallu defend his village. Six young councilors were finally elected. For many months afterwards the outcome was contested.

HEK52	Guzara (Guzera, Gouzara) ("Portuguese Castle", old name: Guba'é, Gubay) Ruin of castle about 65 km from Gondar and 54 km from Azezo. Emperor Minas (1559-1563) set up his abode at Emfras, also known as Guzara. His son Sarsa Dengel (1563-1597) built there a strong stone castle, the ruins of which are within sight of the present-day Bahir Dar-Gondar road. It was a significant step towards the transition by which the "nomadic Ethiopian empire" became "accustomed to the idea of a static capital". Sarsa Dengel, apparently not satisfied with Guzara, later moved his capital to Ayba, immediately north of lake Tana. [Pankhurst, The Ethiopians, 1998 p 101-102] The queen mother and other high dignitaries followed Minas to Dambiya, where he soon founded his capital at Gubay in Emfraz. [Mohammed 1994] According to one tradition, Sarsa Dengel employed two Frenchmen, Garneu and Arnaud, to build his palace at Guzara. In any case it was before the period of Portuguese builders in the region. By 1590, under constant pressure from the Barentu, Sarsa Dengel's court at Gubay was itself unsafe. As a result, he was forced to change his court to Ayba. [Mohammed 1994]	12/37	[Gu Pa x n]
1960s	Just after passing through the village Infrac, 62 km from Gondar, one sees on the left the castle high on a hill. After crossing the Garno river on an arched bridge from the 1500s, one will find various paths leading up to the castle, which it will take at least half an hour of steady climbing to reach. The ground plan of the castle is rectangular with two round angle towers on the north and one square tower on the opposite side. The building has two storeys with an outside staircase to the upper floor. The square tower, which has collapsed, probably had two more storeys. The castle is surrounded by a wall which gives evidence of having contained large gates. The site commands a magnificent view of the Dembiya plain and the lake. [Jäger 1965 p 74] The ancient bridge in masonry with mortar is possibly the first major work built by the Portuguese in Ethiopia. The castle was inhabited until about 1607. There were five rooms in each of two storeys. [Guida 1938 p 380]

??	Gwela (in Agame) Aregawi Subagadis, governor general of Agame, on 12 October 1860 wrote from Gwela to the French consul: "I will restore to the Catholic priests their old residence of Gwela; and I will favour, as far as it depends on me, the communications of your countrymen with my country." In December 1860 Abba Gebre Maryam wrote from Gwela "in the name of the Catholics of the country". Hayle Mikael wrote in 1861 from Kefa that he had been converted in Gwela by Giustino De Jacobis. Three Catholic priests in 1863 wrote from Gwela to Pope Pius IX. They were Tekle Haymanot, Gebre Maryam and Gebre Medhin, and they had all been ordained by Massaja in February 1847.
